THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1910.

Entered at the post office at Barre as second-class matter.

Published every week-day afternoon. Subscriptions: One year, $3.00; one month, 25 cents; single copy, 1 cent.

Frank E. Langley, Publisher.

The average daily circulation of the Barre Daily Times for the week ending Saturday was copies, the largest paid circulation of any daily paper in this section.

5,605

Yes, Barnes may lock the stable door now.

"Roosevelt's convention" has done its work.

The press agent has struck Enosburg Falls, for he tells about a gold strike there.

Shepard is a natural leader, so the New York Democrats expect to choose him for governor.

It would be a punishment in itself for some people to keep still, as the West Point cadets did from choice.

"Brattleboro can add 1,500 to its population." Glad to see the rudiments haven't been forgotten in Brattleboro.

The freshmen at the university of Vermont may consider themselves properly introduced, following the first reception of the year, which was in the police station.

Mayor Gaynor had to use very plain language to convince the New York Democrats that it would be a waste of powder to nominate him for governor. Give Gaynor a rest; he deserves it.

President W. W. Brown of the Automobile Club of Vermont is doing a little missionary work in New Hampshire, and he has almost persuaded the automobilists across the river that they ought to have a state organization, modeled somewhat after the Vermont club. New Hampshire might well use a club of this sort.

That Woodrow Wilson, president of Princeton university, has a powerful degree of optimism is indicated by his statement that "if I am elected governor, as I expect to be," etc. Anyway, many people who are not Democrats would like to see President Wilson's optimism fulfilled. He would bring some new elements into political life in New Jersey that might be so powerful as to spread into other states and assist in driving out some of the sordid things.

Various newspapers have been puzzled by Supt. Grout's use of the word "elope" in describing the escapes from the Vermont state insane asylum at Waterbury, evidently mixing the meaning with that feature of American life which ends in the divorce court. However, Webster's International gives the definition of the verb "elope" as "To run away, or escape privately, from the place or station, to which one is bound by duty." Therefore, it seems that Supt. Grout is entirely right in the use of the word in his official reports, unusual as the connection is.

Granite manufacturers who consider the electric motor an indispensable adjunct of their plants owe a debt of gratitude to that Williamstown man, Thomas Davenport, who invented the motor and whose memory was honored yesterday by the placing of a tablet at the site of his old workshop near Brandon. The electric motor simplified the granite manufacturing business, as, indeed, it has simplified the entire industrial world. It is, therefore, no small boast by Vermont that one of its towns was the birthplace of the inventor of the motor and another of its towns was the scene of his activities.

TOURING IN THE FALL MONTHS.

There never is a better time of the year for automobile touring through Vermont than now. The roads, after the dog-day rains and equinoxials, are packed down hard and free of dust; the atmosphere is clear, making views splendid; the scenery is unmatched; the hotels at easy intervals are good, and their cuisines are attractive to the hungry wayfarers. What more could the automobilists wish than these features? Certainly nothing. Yet automobilists do not seem to realize it, and far less tourists are seen on the roads during the September and October months than during the hot, sultry and rainy months of June, July and August, when many of the inconveniences of travel are to be encountered. They are missing one of the greatest delights of automobilism.

SINGLE-INDUSTRY TOWNS AND OTHERS.

Were Quincy, Mass., dependent on its granite industry to maintain, or increase, its population figures, then Quincy would not have had the splendid gain of 36.6 per cent. in population during the past ten years, for Quincy's granite operations have long since been distanced by the Fore River shipbuilding works and other industries. But diversity of industries has kept the industrial life of the city strong, in spite of whatever slackness there may now be in the once leading business, so that the place has not suffered in population, now having 32,442 people, in contrast to 23,899 ten years ago. The value of having more than one big industry was never more clearly shown than in this instance. Once Quincy was the leading granite center of the eastern country, and it was receiving the impetus from the condition; but the rise of other granite centers, notably Barre, was so sure and so powerful that Quincy was overshadowed as a granite center. Had it, then, been dependent merely on this product of the quarries, it would have suffered thereby, in spite of its close connection with Boston; but, having other industries growing from other natural advantages, it has continued to progress in recent years, until at the present it shows more than the average proportionate increase in population of the Massachusetts cities. Single-industry towns are more or less at the mercy of chance, no matter how splendid may be the prospects of that single industry; and it is well for their citizens to be awake to the possibilities of development along other lines. They may not be all so naturally endowed as Quincy is, with its river mouth and sea front, but there undoubtedly are openings to be taken advantage of.

Current Comment

Hoped Brattleboro Would.

The entire state will hope that Brattleboro's prospects for a new textile mill, for which the board of trade of that village have been negotiating for several months, will materialize. The proposition to Brattleboro, it is announced in the dispatches, is made in this form: The mill men are prepared to invest $300,000 if Brattleboro will put up with it $120,000. A plant with equipment costing $450,000 is contemplated and it is expected that if the mill becomes a fact, the population of Brattleboro will be increased about 1,000 people. With the magnificent power developed by the Connecticut River Power company at Vernon, it would seem that the industrial possibilities of Brattleboro and vicinity were almost unlimited.—Rutland News.

Rutland Railroad a Pioneer.

We quote in another column an article from the Rutland News, which shows that the Rutland railroad, in common with other branches of the New York Central system, deserves credit for the inauguration of autumn excursions from the large cities to rural regions. This is a commendable policy, and the work is one in which all our people can well co-operate.

General Manager George T. Jarvis, who has directed our attention to this matter, is plainly alive to the interests of Vermont and the farmers along the line of the Rutland, both in this state and in New York, are under obligation to him for the manner in which he has co-operated with them in establishing a milk route to New York City, thus opening up an entirely new market for this dairy product.—Burlington Free Press.

Representatives and the Platform.

When asked if he favored the planks of the Republican state platform the other day, a Republican representative-elect replied that he didn't know as he had read it. That is the whole story. Fully half of the towns do not care about the qualifications of their men, their ability, or their understanding of state affairs, but send this or that man because he is a good fellow. These men get to Montpelier without the slightest idea of what is expected of them, what the proposed legislation of their party is, and consequently stand nowhere themselves. They are a hindrance to business-like progress in the legislature and a drag upon those who are well read, well rounded and broadminded and experienced in public affairs.

What possible excuse has a representative-elect to be ignorant of the platform of the Republican party? It has been published by nearly if not all of the papers of the state, and if the legislator does not take a newspaper or if he takes it but does not read what is going on in the state, he is really qualified to be a law-maker?

But it is not too late to repair a part of the trouble. If representative-elect who go to Montpelier October 5 will take some pains to post themselves on questions of the day, the Vermont legislature may meet and immediately take up the business with understanding and go through the work with expedition. Let us have no repetitions of 1908.

Constitutional amendments, tax law reform, road problems, campaign expense laws, school improvements, methods of advertising the state, guarding the powers of the public service commission, all these and many more as important subjects need careful attention and thought by the men who are to make our laws.—Barton Monitor.

HANCOCK.

Death of A. D. Meeks Occurred Monday, After Long Illness.

A. D. Meeks, a resident of this town for many years, died Monday. He had been in poor health for some time and was quite helpless at the last. The funeral was held from his late home yesterday.

Wesley Burke is slightly improved in health.

Miss Jessie Church was at home over Sunday from her work in Rochester.

Herbert Church, who is working in Granville, was with his parents a day or two recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Church of Granville were in town to attend the drama Saturday evening.

Eggs are high for this time of the year, being 20c a dozen, with a prospect of a still higher price. Butter is from 25 to 30c a pound.

The drama, "It's All in the Pay Streak," presented by the Hancock Dramatic club at the village hall, Friday and Saturday evenings, drew a good house and plenty of applause. Though all the actors are young in the work, they filled their parts with credit to themselves and the satisfaction of the audience. The receipts were over $20.

ROCHESTER.

L. J. Spencer and son are working for J. P. Marsh.

Mrs. Duane Dunham and daughter, Blanche, were at L. J. Spencer's recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Almon Goodno spent Sunday with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Welch, in Hancock.

The football game between Randolph and Rochester resulted in a score of 11 to 3 in favor of Randolph.

Henry Howe, who has been ill for some time, is now able to be about some, but is still unable to do any work. He requires much care.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Marsh and Mrs. Will Marsh were in Hancock Saturday evening to attend the drama, "It's All in the Pay Streak," given by the young people.

Nearly all the farmers are cutting ensilage and all report a good year for corn. Many in this vicinity complain of a small yield of potatoes and also that they are rotting badly.

Special Bargains

For Friday and Saturday

The people of Barre and vicinity well remember our great sale which followed our purchase of the old Smith company stock. Never were such bargains heard of before. At that time there were certain goods which came in late the season before and could not be disposed of at that time of the year, such as etc., and had to be carried over. Now we find that we are overloaded with these particular goods, so we have decided to unload them in this great 2 days special sale.

Sweaters, Fleeced-lined Underwear, Wool Hose,
